

Orientation of orthoceras

Draw a line through each orthoceras and number it. Measure the angle between the vertical and the pointed end of the fossil and record it. Plot a rose diagram from your results. Use a circular protractor if you can. Some readings will be greater than 180°. Be careful that you record the correct angle if you have a straight sided protractor. This photo should be enlarged to A4 size.

